SECOND SEASON

The era of the Savastano clan, that once undisputedly reigned over Naples, seems to be hopelessly over: the clan's godfather Pietro Savastano has lost his mind behind bars, his wife Imma and son Genny shot by Pietro's own former right-hand man, Ciro. But Pietro's mental illness was only a ploy for him to escape, and when he does, he will seek to take back what was once his. In the biggest power vacuum ever in the history of the Camorra, many are now vying for what once was the Savastano kingdom, first and foremost Ciro "l'immortale", and his rival turned ally, Salvatore Conte. Building on power, charisma and raw force, Ciro and Conte preside over a new-found, brittle alliance and will stop short of nothing to impose their will, especially against the few remaining die-hard Savastano faithfuls who now live secluded and hopeful of Pietro's resurrection. Not to forget for one second: Genny during whose reign the empire built in decades of hard work by his father collapsed. But he has escaped death and is back on stage. Pietro, Genny, Ciro and Conte: four men in a violent web of blood and love, hatred and revenge. A network to which the new and every bit as ruthless seek admission; a network where social skills harbored by the smartest and most beautiful young women can travel well and far.

Orphaned at an early age and self-sufficient for herself and her younger siblings, Patrizia is one such woman. Malamò, her uncle and Don Pietro Savastano's lieutenant, is very appreciative of the valuable information her attentive eyes and ears pick up at her Secondigliano main street fashion boutique. Or Annalisa, misnamed "Scianel" (for Chanel), the key drug pusher in a market she inherited from her brother Zecchinetta, when he was eliminated by Genny's men in the first season. Her raw and untrusting character, combined with an instinctive, street-smart intelligence makes her a natural, ruthless leader.
